

Profile: Stefan Schramm

A village in the region Vogtland, a farm, 7 siblings and a father named Schramm, who nevertheless found time, to teach little Stefan how to fish—that's how it all started. Stefan Schramm learned Agrotechnician-Mechanisator (doesn't exist anymore) in the German Democratic Republic (also doesn't exist anymore). He became a waiter, then company craftsman, and one month after the fall of the Wall in 1989 he came to Switzerland, and worked his way up from waiter via restaurant manager to publishing, business and exhibition manager at Edition Salz&Pfeffer AG in Zurich.

Beginning of this millennium, Stefan Schramm was watching an old gentleman fly fishing with elegance and ease by a small river, and suddenly he knew: The fish still exists. They have caught him again. And they have never left him since.
